

Physical Penetration Testing

A true measure of your security preparedness

“CornerStone considered the specific and general threats identified for each location and devised a program of “Red Team” Penetration Tests that could be performed ethically and without business interruption. A highly skilled team of consultants then travelled between client sites to carry out a range of pre-defined tests based around set criteria”.

Project

Our client wanted to understand if existing security measures deployed throughout its European, Middle East and African Estate, were effective in offering the protection desired to both its employees and its business operation. They wanted to learn if vulnerabilities existed in both operational and technical security measures and whether there were gaps that could potentially be exploited by a range of potential threat actors. They appreciated that this could offer an invaluable insight and help them direct future mitigation efforts.

Outcome

Using the results of the Penetration Testing, the client was able to focus its efforts on key areas of its security operation, mobilising solutions to address gaps in operational security, technical systems and staff training needs. As a direct result of this in-depth and systematic testing process, the client has now mitigated many previously unappreciated security vulnerabilities and reduced their exposure to the associated risks. Ongoing relations with the client have seen CornerStone continue the testing program on the same as well as new locations, confirming the overall effectiveness of the solutions deployed as a direct result of this project.
