

Critical National Infrastructure

Securing the country's primary assets

“As the lead on the delivery of the security design packages for the site, CornerStone managed to ensure that they encompassed both physical and cybersecurity requirements for each of the areas of the site. Using the 'defence in depth' principle CornerStone developed designs to ensure that the identified risks were reduced as far as possible”.

Project

Because of the High Security nature of this project we can only make limited references to full extent of services that were delivered.

Working within a specialist consortium, our client had a requirement for the development of a full security design for a new Critical National Infrastructure site in the North of Wales. The design needed to ensure that any measures that were to be put in place met with the Centre for the Protection of National Infrastructure (CPNI) guidance as well as European and regulatory standards.

Outcome

Utilising the CornerStone delivery process as a framework for the project, a project-specific process was developed to ensure that the design and the associated documentation met the specific requirements of the client. Working closely with the cybersecurity team CornerStone reviewed the clients existing security requirement documents for the site to challenge and develop them further as the architectural design progressed. CornerStone undertook regular design meetings with the client and the other design houses on the project to mitigate and resolve any conflicts before they developed.
